Directors of docentARTS

A Brief History of docentARTS

docentARTS began as the seed of an idea in 2001 when Pam and Ray Thompson, owners of SupplySource, a commercial office interiors firm, had an epiphany during a local open-studio event. Central Pennsylvania has a wealth of talented artists whose local marketing opportunities are limited. SupplySource has access to a wealth of opportunities for marketing art. The synergy was intriguing, but the timing and context were not right.

In 2005, Judy Olinsky was winding up her directorship of Gallery 152, and she and Pam, friends of 17 years and partners in numerous art and design related community initiatives, began to talk about developing a gallery-based arts consulting business. During 2006, the business plan was developed, the gallery space was built, representation relationships with local and regional artists were established, and the first commercial project, the SupplySource corporate headquarters in Williamsport, was completed. In 2007, the gallery opened, and the business relationship between docentARTS and SupplySource was launched with the production of joint marketing materials and training events for the sales and design staffs of SupplySource.

To date, docentARTS has completed six facility-wide installations and several smaller projects.

The docentARTS mission has expanded and evolved with time and through experiences working with clients. Each client represents a community whose story can be expressed through art. It is our goal and our pleasure to make that a practical reality.
